

Touch (2024)

Description

An Exquisite Journey of Love, Memory, and Self-Discovery

Icelandic director Baltasar Kormákur's Touch is a poignant and visually stunning exploration of memory, aging, loss, and love. This film is vast in scope, stretching over decades, languages, continents, and cultures, yet its sensibility is as exquisitely tender as the flutter of a butterfly wing. With a narrative that weaves between the past and the present, Kormákur captures the essence of first love and the enduring impact it has on our lives.

Touch follows the story of Kristján (Egill Ólafsson), an elderly widower and restaurant owner in Iceland. Concerned about his diminishing memory and fine motor skills, Kristján visits his doctor, who suggests that he address any unresolved issues while he still can. This advice triggers a flood of memories from Kristján's past, specifically his first love, Miko (Yūko Naraishi), whom he met in 1960s London after dropping out of graduate school and working at a Japanese restaurant.

Determined to find her 60 years later, Kristján embarks on a journey to London, just as the world is shutting down in the early days of the COVID-19 pandemic. Despite his daughter's increasingly worried phone calls, Kristján is driven by a sense of purpose and an appreciation for the world around him.

As Kristján travels and investigates, the film takes us back and forth in time, depicting the young Kristján (Palmi Kormákur) and Miko's romance in vibrant 1960s London. The present-day scenes are contrasted with soft, warm-colored memories, beautifully captured by cinematographer Bergsteinn Björgólfsson.

Baltasar Kormákur's direction is both tender and meticulous, creating a film that feels deeply personal and universally resonant. The narrative's structure, which moves fluidly between past and present, allows viewers to experience the full scope of Kristófer's journey. Kormákur's ability to capture the subtle nuances of memory and emotion is evident throughout the film, making Touch a truly immersive experience.

The film's pacing is deliberate, giving viewers time to reflect on the themes of memory, love, and aging. Kormákur balances moments of quiet introspection with scenes of vivid emotional intensity, creating a rich and textured narrative.

Egill Ólafsson delivers a heartfelt performance as the elderly Kristófer, capturing the character's vulnerability and determination. His portrayal of a man grappling with the passage of time and the weight of unresolved love is both moving and profound.

Palmi Kormákur, playing the young Kristófer, brings a sense of youthful exuberance and sincerity to the role. His chemistry with Yūko Narahashi, who plays Miko, is palpable, and their scenes together are filled with warmth and poignancy. The supporting cast, including Masahiro Motoki as Takahashi-san and Lucy DeVito as Kristófer's concerned daughter, add depth and dimension to the film.

Cinematographer Bergsteinn Björgólfsson's work is a visual feast, capturing the contrasting worlds of 1960s London and present-day Iceland with equal beauty and precision. The film's use of color and light enhances the emotional resonance of the story, with the warm tones of memory contrasting with the cooler palette of the present.

One standout scene involves Kristófer meditating among clouds he created in a sunlit room painted sky blue, symbolizing a rare moment of calm in his tumultuous journey. The film's visual style is both poetic and evocative, adding another layer of depth to the narrative.
